

Two Sides of the Moon* Endorsements

“Recently, I was fortunate enough to screen David Gould's Two Sides of the Moon in my graduate seminar on global education. The film's insightful and sensitive look into honor killing is exquisitely presented and expertly researched. The use of a case study concerning the death of a Kurdish immigrant female at the hands of her younger brother in Germany was a powerful method to present this very complex and thorny cultural issue. The questions concerning human rights, cultural difference, difficulties with immigrants in transition, and violence against women worldwide made for a lively discussion on how to address such an issue in pre-collegiate classrooms. This film is a "must see" for educators interested in addressing perspective consciousness and cross-cultural awareness with their students.”

Greg Hamot
Professor, Department of Teaching and Learning
Director, UI Center for Human Rights
283 Lindquist Center North
College of Education
The University of Iowa